रचनात्मक संस्थान

Antonia Grunenberg studied sociology, philosophy as well as languages and German literature in Tübingen, Frankfurt am Main and in Berlin. In 1975, she obtained her PhD in philosophy from the Free University of Berlin and in 1986, she received her accreditation in political sciences from the Technical University of Aix-la-Chapelle (Rhine-Westphalia).

From 1998 to 2009 she has been teaching at the Carl von Ossietzky University of Oldenburg as a professor in Political Science (Political Theory).

In 1999 she founded the "Hannah Arendt Center" at the University of Oldenburg. She is co-founder and board member of the Hannah Arendt award for political thought (Hannah Arendt-Preis für politisches Denken) and member of the scientific board of the foundation "House of German History".

Her research focuses on political theory. She has done extended studies on the various concepts of democracy, and on the political thought of the philosopher Hannah Arendt. She has widely published in both fields.

Theme

Walter Benjamin, philosopher and German literary critic (1898-1940) loved French literature and had a great interest in French political events. His essays on French literature, as well as his critics on novelty French literature in German papers, reflect a deep connection with France. As a Jew and German, and concurrently a 'man of literature' within the French culture, he was one of the first European philosophers in the era of racist nationalism.

The presentation will mainly discuss the 'French life' of Walter Benjamin.'
