Theme of the conference

"For over twenty years we draw the lines of a crisis in humanities publishing: declining circulation, desertion of students, scarcity of "great masters", competition of the Web... we don't lack reasons for concern. Yet in this dark landscape, editorial activity remains intense, inventive and dynamic. What are the new faces of the edition of the humanities today? How general publishers, university editors and "small" independent publishers face the new situation: changes in reading practices, changes in research, the rise of digital books? "
